In the process of editing a paper submitted to the Journal of International Economics, a serious case of plagiarism was uncovered. The paper that was the object of the plagiarism appears in this issue.

After detecting the possibility of plagiarism, a member of the editorial staff helped bring this issue to the attention of the authorities at the home institution of the accused plagiarist. This institution appointed a tribunal which considered all the evidence, found the accused guilty of plagiarism, and terminated the plagiarist’s employment.

All submissions to the Journal of International Economics are understood to contain original unpublished work which is not submitted for publication elsewhere. The editorial staff will continue to investigate, pursue, and expose accusations of plagiarism and other forms of academic misconduct.
